

EDWARD E. IACOBUCCI
President and CEO
DayJet Corporation

A prominent high-tech entrepreneur and system software expert, Ed Iacobucci's technology vision is matched by his proven management and leadership skills. In 1998, Iacobucci was recognized as the top entrepreneur in the world with the prestigious CNN, USA Today and Ernst & Young "International Entrepreneur of the Year" award.

A long time veteran of the technology industry, Iacobucci began his career at IBM where he was a key part of IBM's entry into the commercial software business – first in the network management arena (NetView) and later in the Entry Systems (Personal Computer) division with architecture and design leadership responsibilities for IBM DOS and OS/2. He led the joint IBM-Microsoft design team that launched the modern era of multi-tasking personal computing operating systems.

In 1989, Iacobucci left IBM to co-found a new company to explore and implement his vision of server-based computing, Citrix Systems, Inc. (Nasdaq: CTXS), where he led the company through all of its market and product development phases. Citrix grew rapidly and was named to both the Nasdaq 100 and S&P 500 in record time. Iacobucci served as Citrix chairman through 2000, when he retired to pursue his interests in aviation.

Together with his wife Nancy, he co-founded Wingedfoot Services LLC with one Bombardier Learjet 60 aircraft. Things have never been the same since then. In January 2002, Iacobucci co-founded DayJet Corporation with the mission of bringing affordable and accessible "Per-Seat, On-Demand" jet travel to more people and more organizations.
